There are, of course, also reasons for deliberately falsifying a birth date. Accessing an online service is one, false claim of benefits (e.g. pension) may be another, avoiding or enlisting in armed forces, purchasing age-restricted material, renting a hotel or vehicle, the list goes on. A robust system must account for these possibilities.

In my jurisdiction I swear you could sue them in small claims court. I think it's pretty easy to do and lawyers aren't allowed. You'd probably end up with someone from the nearest Apple store representing Apple and they'd have no answers. Even if you lose, there aren't any downsides and Apple would have to send an employee to participate.
